Message from the Editor

In the last issue of the Arkansas Military History Journal, COL Matthew Anderson's research on the deaths of Arkansas National Guard soldiers during WWII was featured. Now we follow that up with a companion article that looks at the WWI deaths. Tyler Boyd, who is working on a history degree at the University of Central Arkansas, delved into many archival records to compile a list of members of the Arkansas National Guard who lost their lives during the First World War. But Tyler also includes the 1916 Border Campaign in New Mexico. Tyer interned at the Arkansas National Guard Museum during the summer of 2025.

Two Thousand Twenty-Five is the 20th university of Hurricane Katrina, which devastated the Gulf coast of Mississippi and Louisianna, including the city of New Orleans. On August 27, 2025, the Museum hosted a panel discussion that focused on the Arkansas National Guard response. Included in this issue is a pictorial article of photographs of that response. We have also included a featured artifact article of a binder that was donated to the Museum, which includes more than 350 photos of the Katrina disaster and the Arkansas Guard's deployment along the Gulf.

Hope you enjoy this issue of the Arkansas Military History Journal.

Compendium of Arkansas National Guardsmen Who Died Along the Border and World War I

Complied by Tyler Boyd

On April 6, 1917, the United States declared War on Germany and entered into what was then called The Great War, now World War I. At the time of the declaration, the Arkansas National Guard was made up of two infantry regiments that had recently returned from border duty in New Mexico. By August, the Guard now contained three infantry regiments, a field hospital, an ambulance company, and an ammunition train. In the fall, these units were moved to Camp Beauregard in Louisiana for training and joined the 39th Division.

The Arkansas units had their designations changed, and most were consolidated into new organizations, such as the Arkansas Ammunition Train, which became a part of the 114th Ammunition Train. In November, the Guard was bolstered up to War strength due to the arrival of drafted men from the 87th Division. In April 1918, select enlisted men of the 153rd Infantry (Formerly 1st Arkansas) and 154th Infantry (Formerly 3rd Arkansas), and 142nd Field Artillery (Formerly 2nd Arkansas) were sent to France early as replacements. The majority of these men found themselves assigned to the 1st and 2nd Divisions in May and June. In June, a large contingent of guardsmen was again sent as replacements, with many being assigned to the 3rd Division in July 1918. With many of the original members gone, newly drafted men were assigned to bring the units back up to strength.

In early August, the 39th Division departed for France; upon arrival, however, they were designated as a Depot Division to field replacements for the front lines. In mid—September, many were transferred to the 32nd Division, and again in October. In November, the Division was skeletonized, and those that remained were transferred to the 41st Division (1st Depot Division). No Arkansas Guard unit fought on the front lines; however, the Arkansas guardsmen themselves did, with nearly one hundred dying while serving with the 3rd Division alone. These guardsmen have often been neglected, and this research is published with the goal that these men will not be forgotten.

The original goal of this project was to list and document the military service histories of every soldier and marine who lived in the State of Arkansas at the time of their enlistment or induction into the armed forces who died while serving in the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I. At the time of writing, a total of 785 Arkansas soldiers who died overseas have been researched and documented, with 442 of those being combat-related deaths. The process of documenting those who died of disease or other causes while overseas is still ongoing. Last year, I donated the research I had gathered to the Arkansas National Guard Museum. Over the course of this summer, I had the honor of interning at the Museum and was asked to compile all the Arkansas Guardsmen that I had found while researching, and put them into a format similar to COL Mathew W. Anderson's work on the fallen guardsmen of WW2. It is important to clarify who exactly qualifies as an Arkansas Guardsman. For this project, all soldiers who were residents of Arkansas and who served in an Arkansas Guard unit at some point in their time in the Army between 1916-1918 are considered to be Guardsmen. This research makes no distinction between volunteers or draftees.

This research began by using the book, Soldiers of the Great War, which was published by the Soldiers Record Publishing Company in 1920. This book provides a list of Arkansas overseas casualties, likely compiled from information released by the War Department and published in newspapers during the war. The list is divided into those who were killed, died of disease, etc., and shows the name of the soldier. A city in Arkansas is listed next to their name. However, it is not their place of residence, but the location of their emergency contact. An emergency contact (EC) was a person whom a soldier would name to be informed in the event of their death. Often, this person was their parents, siblings, or spouse. The EC address was published when a soldier died, and if their EC was a resident in Arkansas, he would be included as an Arkansas casualty in Soldiers of the Great War, regardless of their own residence.

This source also has issues with accuracy, as it will at times list a soldier as being killed when, in actuality, he was very much alive. Oftentimes, the reason for this was that a soldier was wounded and reported as dead in the confusion of war, which in turn was published by the War Department. One particularly egregious example, lists Lieutenant William H. Turner of Jonesboro as being killed in action, despite the fact he had never even left the state during the war. Due to these errors, another source was sought after that listed Arkansas casualties, and it was found in the Adjutant General's Office (AGO). Their list, also published in 1920, gives a generally more accurate list of overseas Arkansas Casualties during the war. They include soldiers who, "Entered Service from the State of Arkansas," meaning they resided in Arkansas at the time of their entry into the Army, which was the only branch included in this list. The AGO also provides more information than Soldiers of the Great War, such as a soldier's serial number, date of death, and the unit they served in when they died. However, this list is also not perfect and does contain errors. For example, a soldier's listed unit will be occasionally incorrect as it will state the unit they served in the longest, not the unit in which they died serving with. It will at times misreport soldiers as dying from disease when they were killed in combat, as was the case for Arkansans George L. Brown and Oscar Peters. There are at least 8 cases of Arkansas soldiers who died not appearing on the list at all, these being found by searching for Arkansas casualties on the American Battle Monuments Commission website. It is highly likely, though unfortunate, that there are still Arkansas guardsmen who died and are not included in this research.

In total, there are 308 soldiers in this research. This is certainly not all Guardsmen by any means, as, unlike those who died overseas, there are no casualty reports or lists for those who died in the states. In order to document those who died while still in the states, I had to comb through every Arkansas Guard muster roll from June 1916 until July 1918 to find those who died, which in most cases was from diseases. Muster Rolls after June 1918 for the 39th Division stop listing those who died. In addition to this, numerous transfers make tracking down state-side soldiers more difficult.

For the sake of conserving space, the research shown here is not the full extent of information found on a soldier. Here is an example of what a full-service record looks like:

An explanation of each element of the following research is as follows:

Rank: Rank held by the soldier at the time of their death

Name: The full first and last name of the soldier. For the most part, a soldier's name will be as it was stated in military documents.

Service Number: The service number of a soldier, if applicable. Service numbers were introduced in February 1918 to keep track of the enlisted soldiers in the ever-expanding military. Any soldier who died before they could be assigned a service number has "N/A" listed instead. Officers were not issued service numbers during the war.

Units: The unit the soldier served in at the time of their death. If two units are listed, the unit on the top will be the last Arkansas Guard unit the soldier was assigned to prior to being transferred, and the unit on the bottom will be the organization the soldier was transferred to, where they died serving in.

Date of Death: The date of death of a soldier. The date a soldier died might vary, often by one or two days. The soldier's gravestone might list "October 9, 1918" while their burial card will state "October 8, 1918." In these cases, the date listed on the burial card will take precedence.

Nature of Casualty: Under this heading, there are three categories a casualty could fall into: Killed in Action (KIA), Died of Wounds (DOW), or Died Non-Battle (DNB). Underneath this will be where or, in the case of DNB, what the soldier died from. For example, soldiers who were KIA or DOW will have the battle or sector where they died. In most cases, soldiers under DNB died from disease, and, if available, the disease will be listed below. If a [?] next to a disease, it means that it is likely the soldier died from a disease, but not confirmed.

In addition to the above information, each soldier's information will be colorcoded. The meaning of each color is as follows:

Blue: Transferred as a Replacement in April 1918, where most were assigned to the 1st and 2nd Divisions

Orange: Transferred as a Replacement in June 1918, where most were assigned to the 3rd Division

Green: Transferred as a Replacement after the arrival of the 39th Division in France, where most were sent to the 32nd Division

Yellow: Transferred while still in the states, and sent to France in a new unit.

White: Died while serving in a guard unit.

The following is an explanation of the sources most used in this research:

Muster Rolls: Muster Rolls, the backbone of this research, were rosters, on a company or detachment level, originally published every other month until July 1918, when they changed to monthly. Muster rolls included the names of all soldiers in the unit. From July 1918 onwards the muster rolls became much shorter and had less information about the soldiers. All muster rolls used for this project were received from FamilySearch.com

It is clear from these two images the muster roll published in June 1918 (Left) has far more information regarding the individual soldier than the later monthly muster roll published in September 1918 (Right).

Morning Reports: Morning reports were daily reports stating changes that occurred since the last report. These were made at a company or detachment level. These are useful in looking for specific dates a soldier was transferred, joined, or promoted. Most reports are handwritten and the ability to read the information depends on the individual writer's penmanship or how well the image is scanned. For some units, their morning reports are incomplete. This was either because they weren't filled out, or an entire month of reports went missing. Morning reports from other units simply no longer exist. All morning reports used in this project were obtained from Fold3.com

Some morning reports, like the one above, are typed and can be easier to read, while most, like the one below, are often difficult to understand at first glance and require more time to decipher.

VA Master Index Card: VA master index cards provide basic information regarding a soldier's service, such as their full name, date of birth and death, entry and discharge date, last rank held, service number, VA benefits, and their last unit. These cards were the starting point for researching most of these soldiers. The address listed on these cards, however, is not the address when they entered the military but the address they or their dependents lived when these cards were issued. All VA cards were obtained through FamilySearch.com

This is the VA card for my Great-Great Grandfather Bruce E. Gray. The information these cards provide was extremely valuable in this research.

US Army Transportation Passenger List: The US Army transportation list provides information on when soldiers were sent overseas and when they returned. Provided as well are the ships that made the crossing to and from. All of these documents were obtained at Fold3.com

Draft Cards: Draft cards can provide information such as where a soldier lived at the time he registered, his birthday, occupation, appearance, and prior military service. All draft cards were obtained through FamilySearch.com and Fold3.com

US Burial Cards: Burial Cards detail when a soldier died, what unit they were assigned to, the nature of their death, as well as information regarding where they were buried and if they were returned to the United States. Burial Cards were obtained using Fold3.com

Gravestones & Headstone Applications: A soldier's gravestone is useful in determining the exact dates a soldier was born or died, while military headstone applications can be useful in double-checking information regarding their service to ensure there is no mix-up. All gravestones were found using Findagrave.com and all military headstone applications were found using Fold3.com

AGO Cards: Adjutant General Office Cards, located at the Arkansas States Archives, are useful in determining when a soldier was transferred, rank appointments, and if they sustained wounds while in service. Apart from these, most of these cards have inaccurate or incomplete information, including the residence that the soldier is listed as living in, as many other sources contradict it.

In August 2005, twenty years ago, one of the most devastating hurricanes in U.S. history made landfall along the Gulf Coast, impacting Louisiana and Mississippi. The storm resulted in over 1,800 fatalities, estimated $108 billion in damages and displaced more than a million people. New Orleans, in particular, was highly vulnerable, given its average elevation of approximately six feet below sea level and its complete encirclement by water.

Although the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers constructed a system of levees and seawalls to protect the city from flooding, these defenses become compromised over the years leaving them to be waterlogged swamps and marshes to the east and west of the city. When Hurricane Katrina struck, these levee systems failed catastrophically, flooding neighborhoods located below sea level, many of which housed the city's most vulnerable residents.

In anticipation of the storm, the mayor issued the city's first-ever mandatory evacuation the day before landfall. The Superdome, on higher ground, was designated as a "shelter of last resort." By evening, nearly 80% of residents evacuated, but approximately 100,000 lacked transportation. Over 10,000 sought refuge in the Superdome, while others chose to remain at home, waiting out the storm.

On the morning of August 29th, Hurricane Katrina made landfall with storm surges reaching up to nine meters in some areas. Residents faced life-threatening conditions, with many forced to seek safety in attics or on rooftops. In the following 24 hours, the U.S. Coast Guard rescued more than 30,000 people in New Orleans alone. Meanwhile, the Arkansas National Guard was deployed first to Mississippi and then to Louisiana, assisting with rescue operations, aid distribution, and support efforts in the affected states. Calling the courageous team "Task Force Razorbacks".

By September 3rd, over 10,000 hurricane survivors were relocated to Fort Chaffee, where they received medical care, housing assistance, supplies, and emotional support. National Guard personnel played a vital role in registration, family reunification, and helping displaced residents find long-term shelter and aid.

The following pages feature photographs taken by MSG Bob Barnett, documenting both the extensive damage inflicted by Hurricane Katrina and the heroic efforts of our Arkansas Guard members in response.

Featured Artifact

Three-Ring Binder of Hurricane Katrina Photos (2023.31.01)

In this issue, the featured artifact is a bit different. Because of the 20th anniversary of Hurricane Katrina, the public program at the Museum on August 27th commemorating the Arkansas Guard response, and the pictorial of Katrina in this issue, we focus on a three-ring binder called "Task Force 'Razorback."

The large binder was donated to the museum by MG (ret) Don Morrow, who was the Adjutant General of the Arkansas National Guard from 1996 to 2006.

The binder includes four articles authored by SGT Mark A. Woodall as well as over 360 photographs of the damage and the Arkansas National Guard response taken by MSG Bob Barnett. Some photos take up the entire page, while other pages include 2 to 4 photographs. All are color photos.

The binder was created by DET 1 70th MPAD.

Most of the photos that the ARNG Museum posses come from this binder.

"HURRICANE KATRINA"

Volume 1 "Camp Brian lends help to Soldiers" Issue 1 by: SGT Mark A. Woodall

September, 13

Gulfport, MS.—If Florida businessman Brian Raines had things his way, he would say "Believe in America." Raines practices what he preaches. When he heard of the tragedy he mobilized quickly to assist in his own way. "I am doing this for my troops-this is something my dad would have done," says Raines. His father is a former Signal Sergeant who served with the US Army in Germany and Korea.

"He is one of the nicest people I have ever met-he epitomizes what Americans should be," says Staff Sergeant Melisa McNeary. Raines modestly downplays his generosity. When truck drivers arrived with relief supplies, their funding had not yet made it. Soldiers and volunteers say Mr. Raines just pulled out his check book and paid roughly eight thousand dollars to the truckers.

"We need to be positive-we will rebuild better and stronger, we just have to believe in America," says Raines. When people criticize other countries for not rushing aid to the United States in times of crisis, Brian Raines dismisses that type of negativity. He says we should take pride in the fact that we can take care of our own, and to be able to help others. "This is what America is all about," says Raines.

The Florida resident is no stranger to service having retired as a US Marine, who served in Okinawa with the 39 Lima Company. He vows to stay with the relief site until the troops leave. That is okay with many of the soldiers who work side by side with Raines. His cheerful nature is a welcome attitude in Gulfport. Private Brandon Burrell of the 1123rd Transportation Company says, "He is a real humanitarian-this country has to pull together. Mr. Raines sets the example for that." Survivors of the hurricane often benefit by his free food from Dominos pizza.

"Just getting a handshake and a thank you from people really builds morale for our soldiers-Mr. Raines goes above and beyond that," says Command Sergeant Major

Annual Preservation and Restoration Update

This year, and every year, the dedicated team at the Arkansas National Guard Museum tirelessly commits to preserving and restoring our invaluable artifacts. Despite being a small but passionate team, we successfully conserve a wide array of historical items, including guns, swords, uniforms, personal items and more, ensuring that these pieces of our shared history remain vibrant and accessible for future generations.

In addition to physical preservation, we diligently update and maintain our comprehensive database, which contains detailed information on each artifact. We record provenance, such as the original donors, and the rich history and stories behind each item. Our condition reports are an integral part of our ongoing preservation efforts, guiding us in caring for and storing artifacts to prolong their life and significance. This year. in a huge accomplishment, all of our guns and weapon pieces have been cleaned and preserved by RET SSG Dan Horan, who spent all summer and previous years dedicated to these artifacts.

We spend much of our time researching historical documents, such as old newspaper articles, journals, and other primary sources. These efforts help us better understand and interpret the artifacts, ensuring that future researchers and visitors can learn from them and appreciate their importance.

We extend our heartfelt gratitude to our team for their unwavering dedication and hard work. And to you, our valued supporter and visitor, thank you. Your support and interest in Arkansas history, empower us to preserve and share these vital pieces of our past.

Together, we ensure that Arkansas history continues to live on through these treasured artifacts.

To explore some of these artifacts virtually, visit out website at arngmuseum.com. You can research independently or reach out to our museum staff for assistance on your research journey.
